Electric Submetering Products

Rising energy costs continue to pressure owner occupied building managers to leave “no stone unturned” in finding ways to reduce operating expenses. Managers have turned to submetering to identify when and where energy is used in order to implement energy conservation measures, allocate costs and identify cost saving opportunities.

The type of energy data needed by today’s sophisticated facility manager to achieve their energy goals is well beyond the capability of the master utility meter at the main service entrance.

Submeters provide detailed and accurate interval data snapshots of energy use and demand from enterprise level all the way down to a specific circuit or piece of equipment.
